PIER PARTY—The MaliBlue Art and Music Festival, a fundraiser for the Surfrider Foundation, rocked the Malibu Pier over the weekend. A huge crowd turned out to hear live music by musicians that included Tyrone Wells, Mishka, Meiko and Trevor Hall. Malibuite Mathew McConaughey emceed the event. An auction featured custom surfboards, original artwork, prints and photography. A beautiful blue bay and perfect Malibu beach weather provided a live reminder of the importance of the event's "help save our oceans" theme.

HELPING OTHERS—During spring break, seven Malibu High students traveled to Ecuador to serve at the For His Children orphanage in Quito. The volunteers helped with physical therapy and swimming exercises to build strength, as well as assisting in daily jobs to keep the orphanage running. The trip was organized by Young Life Malibu Coast and Canyons, an international faith-based organization that supports middle and high school students through mentoring and events. Above, Jack Oakey, Lauren Haas and Katherine Jacobson hold some of the infants at the orphanage.

GENEROSITY—The Pt. Dume Marine Science Elementary School fifth graders recently unveiled their Legacy gift to the school—a new sign located at the entrance of the school's parking lot. The money for the sign was raised through fundraising activities, including bake sales and car washes.

BIG DAY—While attending the Los Angeles Times Festival of Books last weekend, Malibu High School sixth grader Matthew Aubrey met several authors. Above, he has a book signed by renowned children's author and illustrator Eric Carle, who wrote "The Very Hungry Caterpillar" 40 years ago. Carle was one of the featured guest presenters at the festival.

CONGRATULATIONS—Next month, longtime Malibuite and actress Lorna Lembeck will be ordained as a Cantor by the Academy for Jewish Religion. Lembeck, who has had a long and successful career singing and acting on stage and film, and her husband director Michael Lembeck, are among the founders of the Malibu Jewish Center's new building.
